COURSE DESCRIPTION

0320-601: RESEARCH METHODS IN TRANSLATION STUDIES
CR: 3

This course identifies and critically assesses the research methods associated with each of the major approaches to Translation Studies (textual approaches, cultural studies approaches, sociological approaches, process research, interpreting research, etc.). Included are quantitative and qualitative studies, descriptivism and prescriptivism, observation and experimentation, objectivity/subjectivity and self-reflexivity. The notion of 'translation' as an object of study (ethnocentrism, prototype theory, cluster theory) will also be considered.

0320-602: APPROACHES TO TRANSLATION
CR: 3

Translation studies is a field which applies linguistic, literary, social and ethical theories. This course covers the interdisciplinary nature of the field, explores various theories and approaches to investigating problems of translation/interpreting and highlights the interdisciplinary link of translation/interpreting to various topics, such as social awareness, accuracy, equivalence, gender, ethics, political representation, etc.

0320-603: LITERARY AND INTERCULTURAL COMMUNICATION

This course provides an understanding of various literary and cross-cultural texts, highlighting issues of ideology, power, master discourse, post-colonial, gender, intercultural criticism, and the sociology of translation. It also considers the translator as a socially-situated agent.

0320-604: RESEARCH ISSUES IN TECHNICAL TRANSLATION
CR: 3

This course provides a platform for discussing research issues and perspectives on problems relating to specialized translation. This will involve investigating a wide range of registers in technical translation including scientific, legal, journalistic, economic, etc. Other topics on translation and technology, such as translation memory, terminology management, and computer-aided translation will also be covered.

0320-605: TRANSLATION COMMENTARY
CR: 3

This course examines introspective and retrospective research in translation. This requires the translation of a text followed by a commentary on the process of translation. The commentary will be comprised of the analysis/discussion of the translation along with the reason and justification of the translation strategies and consideration of ways to investigate complex problems of translation. This course will also involve commentary on different existing translations and comparison between translations of the same work.
